

Meg Tyler

The Dead

Somewhere below the ground the children have not stopped hungering.
Having no use for their need, we don't think of them.

In the warmer months, they push up dandelion after dandelion.
Roots of trees grow molasses-colored fingers
And wedge the boxes back, firmer into the firmament.

P ne
POETRY
NORTHEAST